- The HIPAA Privacy Rule protects all "individually identifiable health information" and requires that individuals involved in health care maintain the security of patient records in any form (i.e., electronic, paper, or oral).

Information (written or digital) about colleagues and co-workers should not be posted anywhere without their consent and if posted should be truthful and accurate.

When posting information on the internet, consider the following:

- The impact of the information you disseminate via social networking sites prior to posting material. Respect for one's colleagues, co-workers, and institution is essential to maintaining a professional work environment.
- The permanency of published material on the internet – once posted on the internet, things live forever.
- The fact that patients regularly Google their physicians and that posts reflect CUSOM as an institution.
- Disclosure of patient information on social media may violate state and federal laws and lead to enforcement actions by agencies such as the State Board of Medical Examiners and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

The patient-physician relationship relies on mutual respect and professionalism. Social networking with patients, including communicating with patients or giving medical advice via social networking sites should not be done.

HSPs must not represent or imply that they are expressing the opinion of the organization by using hospital or institution proprietary information such as logos or mastheads. Trainees must comply with the current hospital or institutional policies with respect to such information.

If an HSP creates a blog, clear disclaimers that the views expressed by the author in the blog are the authors' alone and do not represent the views of the hospital or school of medicine must be posted. Such posts must:

- Be clear and write in the first person;
- Make the writing clear and that it is coming from an individual and not on behalf of either the respective hospital or school of medicine; and
- Be compliant with policies in the Resident Handbook including, but not limited to, provisions concerning discrimination, harassment, and professionalism.
